Two or more VPN providers may support the same VPN protocol. A virtual private network (VPN) allows you to send your data securely and privately through public networks like the Internet. However, not all VPNs are created equal. Some offer the basics, but others go way beyond the norm.

The most important thing to know about VPNs is that VPNs encrypt your data and let the provider keep it for only as long as is necessary. As part of your VPN plan, you may get access to a private IP address or you may not. A private IP address enables you to bypass geographical restrictions. It may be possible for your provider to track all of the websites you visit through your private IP address. If you access a website through a private IP address, the site you're visiting doesn't know that you're coming from a different location. In addition, as a private user, you can bypass the location restriction you may find on some websites. If your VPN provider assigns a private IP address to you, you may not be able to get the connection at home or work. However, if you are at a location where a connection isn't available, you may be able to use a proxy to provide you with the VPN connection.

In this scenario, your VPN provider may use a public IP address and then route the traffic through your proxy.Q: How to structure AngularJS controller properly I am new to AngularJS and I am trying to clean my code in the following way: Create a Angular controller that will contain logic This works for all our controllers angular.module('todoApp', []) .controller('TodoController', function($scope) { $scope.todos = [{ id: "1", title: "Star Wars", completed: false }, { id: "2", title: "Jane", completed: true }]; }) Create view that will contain html create it in index.html and include it directly from there
